Students Connecting the Dimensions

“I used leadership development to lead my group and divide the workload for the project we created. I made sure everyone was doing their work and that the amount of work put in by each of my group members was equal.”

“We used information fluency to analyze different types of media during every class meeting. I loved being able to use different types of technology and text to further my learning.”

Students Connecting the Dimensions

“Throughout my project, I used interdisciplinary learning to understand the multiple dimensions of the Venezuelan Economic Crisis. Specifically, I focused on the role of various social sciences while analyzing the core of their financial catastrophe. In my project, I emphasize culture, politics, history, and geography as key components of the problem at hand.”

“We connected how topics such as unwed motherhood, birth control, and sex education have changed over time and critically analyzed the stigma surrounding those topics.”
